Written by Anton Chekhov and adapted by two-time Pulitzer Prize Finalist, Sarah Ruhl, "Three Sisters" is a masterwork about loneliness, longing, and growing up.

"After the death of their father, the Prozorov siblings are trapped: in a thankless job, in a loveless marriage and in a provincial town with no one but their father's soldiers to keep them company. They dream of packing up everything and moving back to Moscow, but when the dashing and mysterious Colonel Vershinin arrives one day, he brings with him the spark of hope to escape their dull life, and the possibility of destroying everything."
